Overview

The Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps (Air Force ROTC) provides you the opportunity to become a United States Air Force officer while completing your college degree. The program, combining traditional undergraduate and/or graduate education with military instruction, will prepare you to tackle the leadership challenges awaiting the Air Force in the years ahead.

In addition to the classroom time, each student must participate in a two-hour Leadership laboratory per week throughout the student's enrollment in AFROTC. Instruction is conducted within the framework of an organized cadet corps with a progression of experiences designed to develop each student's leadership potential. The first two years of the Leadership Laboratory includes a study of Air Force customs and courtesies, drill and ceremonies, issuing military commands, instructing, directing, and evaluation the preceding skills, studying the environment of an Air Force officer and learning about areas of opportunity available to commissioned officers. The last two years of Leadership Lab consist of activities classified as advanced leadership experiences. They involve the planning and controlling of military activities of the cadet corps, the preparation and presentation of briefings and the other oral and written communications as well as receiving guidance and information which will increase the understanding, motivation, and performance of other cadets.

Federal scholarships are available for AFROTC cadets – any academic major may apply. For high school seniors, applications must be made online at the <http://www.AFROTC.com> website. For college students who are already enrolled in the AFROTC program, scholarships may be available for students who meet the academic and physical fitness requirements.

Participation in AFROTC is not required to take Aerospace courses.
