AMERICAN STUDIES,
POST-BACCALAUREATE CERTIFICATE

The Department of American Studies (https://www.slu.edu/arts-and-sciences/american-studies/) at Saint Louis University provides a systematically interdisciplinary approach to the study of the cultures of the United States and to the critical analysis of their historical and contemporary evolutions through the graduate certificate in American studies. We train students in the skills of clear thinking, writing and speaking, as well as the abilities associated with interpreting literary texts, evaluating historical documents and artifacts, applying humanistic and social scientific methods and theoretical approaches, and reflecting ethically about the problems and issues raised in the classroom. As an interdisciplinary field, our courses and curriculum often connect academic study to community institutions, organizations, and populations.

For current SLU students enrolled in other master’s, doctoral or professional postgraduate programs at SLU, the graduate certificate offers coursework in the growing and vibrant interdisciplinary study of American history and culture. American studies is an 80-year old field, with its own organizations, journals, canon, and methodologies. But at the practical level, lines between American studies and cognate fields are often crossed, especially in the job market.

As a stand-alone program, a graduate certificate in American studies can offer professional development or targeted post-graduate training.

Curriculum Overview
The graduate certificate in American studies requires three courses, one required and two electives, and a one-hour written certificate exam.

Fieldwork and Research Opportunities
American studies topics courses offer an array of guided research methodologies and topics, including archival, literary and film, media and cultural studies, visual studies, and others.
