Overview
The Saint Louis University Department of English is home to the study of literature, creative writing and rhetoric. The department also teaches new and emergent areas of the discipline, including film, new media writing, and literature and technology. Through the study of language, students learn to write persuasively and to engage with literary forms, genres and histories. In imaginatively entering into the experiences of diverse communities from different times and cultures, students explore the origins and dynamics of cultural value.
