INDUSTRIAL-ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY, PH.D.

Saint Louis University's graduate program in industrial-organizational psychology prepares doctoral-level professionals with the knowledge, research abilities, assessment skills and intervention approaches to impact organizational issues at the individual, group and system levels to improve individual well-being, group functioning and organizational effectiveness.

Some important topics within these levels include:

- Individual differences
- Performance management
- Selection
- Motivation
- Groups/teams
- Organizational development
- Occupational health
- Systems and process consultation
- Organizational assessment

Curriculum Overview

This program requires that students complete a minimum of 73 credits (or the equivalent for students who enroll with a master’s degree in industrial-organizational psychology). In addition to coursework and professional training activities, industrial-organizational psychology students must complete and successfully defend an empirical thesis and dissertation.

Fieldwork and Research Opportunities

In SLU’s doctoral program in industrial-organizational psychology, students will learn to conduct research on and in organizations as well as how to apply psychological theory, models and principles in the workplace.

Through supervised research and professional experience, students are trained as science-practitioners and are expected to develop competence in research and, if their career goals warrant, organizational consultation.

Supervised applied experience is essential for good training in the doctoral psychology program. While it is not required, most students take advantage of a vast network of professional connections that the program has established in St. Louis and complete practica (i.e., short-term projects) and/or internships (a one-year minimum commitment). Many students finish the program with two to three years of professional experience, making them attractive to potential employers.

Careers

Graduates are fully prepared to practice as industrial-organizational psychologists, applying the principles of psychology to human resources, management, marketing and more. The Bureau of Labor Statistics lists the mean annual salary of this occupation as $112,690 in 2020.

Alumni are employed at organizations such as:

- Ameren UE
- Center for Creative Leadership
- Bayer
- Pfizer
- Nike
- FedEx
- Collarelli, Meyer, & Associates
- United States Secret Service
- Metropolitan Life
- Embry-Riddle University
- Northern Illinois University
- DePaul University
- Appalachian State University
- Virginia Commonwealth University
- University of West Florida

Admission Requirements

Applicants should possess an undergraduate GPA of 3.5 or higher, a psychology major (i.e., a minimum of 18 upper-division credits in psychology, including statistics/research methods), and a review of TOEFL scores (for international applicants).

Application Requirements
