

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION, M.B.A. & LAW, J.D. DUAL DEGREE

The dual degree Juris Doctor and Master of Business Administration offered through Saint Louis University School of Law (<https://www.slu.edu/law/>) and the Richard A. Chaifetz School of Business (<https://www.slu.edu/business/>) gives students the opportunity to solve complex legal and business problems, develop advanced data analysis skills to meet industry demand, and work directly with practicing attorneys and clients through professional skills courses, legal clinics and field placements. Students also have the advantage of learning from renowned professors in both schools and tapping into each school's respective alumni network, while receiving distinctive training rooted in service and ethical leadership.

SLU's J.D./MBA provides an awareness of the functional relationship between the legal system, business and administrative organizations. The increasing complexity of both business organizations and nonprofit institutions makes such understanding important for students considering careers in corporate law, private practice dealing with businesses, and government or public service. Other career options include in-house counsel, corporate real estate, white collar crime investigation, management consulting, or nonprofit work. An attorney with a graduate degree in business has the distinct analytical training and in-depth perspective of each field, equipping them with a comprehensive approach that serves as a tremendous asset to any company or organization and puts them at a substantial advantage in the job market.

In this dual degree program, students complete both degrees spending less time and money than if they obtained the degrees separately. The first year of study is spent completing the basic curriculum in the School of Law. The following summer, fall and spring semesters, students enroll in business courses and complete their MBA. Students then use the remaining three semesters to complete their law program.
