

CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Leadership

Kathryn Mitchell Pierce, Ph.D.
Program Director

Overview

Saint Louis University's programs in curriculum and instruction are ideal for those interested in writing curriculum and/or improving instruction in a variety of teaching and learning contexts. Students in this program study curriculum theory, curriculum development and related instructional processes and tools.

About the Faculty

All faculty members in curriculum and instruction bring prior experience as teachers in K-12 settings. Together they offer expertise in the areas of children's literature, civics and citizenship, English education, international education, literacy teaching and learning, race and racial equity, mathematics, science and STEM education, special education, the role of talk in learning, writing instruction and young adult literature. Students work closely with their faculty mentors to develop a program of study that fits their professional context, research interests and personal learning goals.
