

CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Saint Louis University's programs in curriculum and instruction are ideal for those interested in writing curriculum and/or improving instruction in a variety of teaching and learning contexts. Students in this SLU program study curriculum theory, curriculum development and related instructional processes and tools.

About the Faculty

Faculty members in curriculum and instruction bring experience as teachers in K-12 settings. They offer expertise in assessment, children's literature, civics and citizenship, English education, international education, literacy teaching and learning, mathematics, psychology of education, race and racial equity, science and STEM education, the role of talk in learning, writing instruction and young adult literature. Students work closely with their faculty mentors to develop a program of study that fits their professional context, research interests and personal learning goals.
