

PUBLIC HEALTH, POST-BACCALAUREATE CERTIFICATE

Saint Louis University's 15-credit post-baccalaureate certificate in public health trains students to be competent in the core areas of public health. Coursework for the certificate is available both online and in-person, giving the program the flexibility to be pursued by students who are already in the workplace.

Coursework from this program can be applied towards an M.P.H. degree at SLU (<https://www.slu.edu/public-health-social-justice/programs-and-certificates/public-health/master-of-public-health/>) in any concentration within two years of completing the certificate. This certificate may be completed concurrently with any degree at SLU, except for the Master of Public Health.

As the only accredited Catholic Jesuit school of public health in the nation, Saint Louis University's College for Public Health and Social Justice (<https://www.slu.edu/public-health-social-justice/>) is committed to social justice and the Jesuit mission (<https://www.slu.edu/about/catholic-jesuit-identity/>). Graduate-level public health classes in this program are taught by faculty who are internationally recognized as leaders in public health research and practice and have diverse research interests.

Curriculum Overview

SLU's post-baccalaureate certificate in public health is completed with five courses totaling 15 credit hours. Topics include both public health practice and policy. For more information, view the requirements and roadmap tabs.

Careers

Students awarded this certificate will be prepared to pursue or advance in positions such as health educator, nonprofit program coordinator, health services manager, community health worker or public health researcher. Completion of the certificate in public health can also be an important career tool and credential for professionals of other fields that intersect with public health, including social workers, hospital administrators, urban planners and clinicians such as physicians and nurses.
